“Can the US and China Expect to Form a
More Collaborative Relationship?”

Orville Schell
Asia Society

Thursday, September 22, 4:30 p.m.
Lecture Hall 403, Alexander Library

Orville Schell, a leading authority on US-China relations, is the Arthur Ross Director of the Center on U.S.-China Relations at Asia Society in New York. He is a former professor and Dean at the University of California, Berkeley Graduate School of Journalism.

Schell is the author of many books including Wealth and Power, China's Long March to the 21st Century (Random House, 2013; Chinese translation, 2014); Virtual Tibet (Henry Holt, 2000); The China Reader: The Reform Years (Vintage Books, 1999); and Mandate of Heaven (Simon & Schuster, 1994). He has written widely for many magazines and newspapers, including The Atlantic Monthly, The New Yorker, Time, The New Republic, The Nation, The New York Review of Books, Wired, Foreign Affairs, the China Quarterly, and The New York Times, The Washington Post, and Los Angeles Times.

Schell is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, a Fellow at the Weatherhead East Asian Institute at Columbia University, and a Senior Fellow at the Annenberg School of Communications at the University of Southern California. He is also the recipient of many prizes and fellowships, including a Guggenheim Fellowship, the Overseas Press Club Award, and the Harvard-Stanford Shorenstein Prize in Asian Journalism.

Abstract: In this talk, Professor Schell will do an accounting of those areas where the US and China find themselves in potential disagreement (such as the South China Sea, human rights, and Taiwan, Tibet and Hong Kong) and those areas where there is real potential for collaboration (e.g., climate change, anti-nuclear proliferation, pandemics, and anti-terrorism). He then will give an assessment of how these national interests of the US and China actually share more in common than they diverge from each other.
